

Multnomah County Juvenile Crime Prevention Strategic Plan

2009-2011 Biennium – Executive Summary

JCP Planning Overview

Multnomah County's Juvenile Crime Prevention (JCP) strategic planning process sets the direction for Juvenile Crime Prevention in our community in the coming years, assuring a comprehensive, balanced strategy to fight crime and keep our community safe. Through this process our community identified how to address public safety issues with existing resources, and target service gaps for future development. This plan belongs to the community, and extensive efforts were made to be inclusive.

The JCP planning process was orchestrated through a collaboration between the Multnomah County Commission on Children, Families and Community and the Multnomah County Department of Community Justice. The JCP plan is approved by the Commission on Children, Families and Community, the Local Public Safety Coordinating Council (LPSCC) and its juvenile justice forum the Juvenile Justice Council, the Board of County Commissioners, and the Oregon Commission on Children and Families.

The process included input through community stakeholder forums made up of representatives from the public safety, child welfare and education systems, as well as local youth-serving community organizations and youth. JCP planning occurred in multiple meetings facilitated by the LPSCC executive director. Participants from the community forums contributed their experience and expertise to develop community issue areas for concentration of strategies in the 2009-2011 biennium, revolving around education, employment, safe communities, and healthy families.

Analysis

The planning process included analysis of risk profile data from Juvenile Crime Prevention Risk Assessments on the youth most likely to enter or further penetrate the juvenile justice system. Further analysis included crime trend and recidivism data, census demographic data, school completion data, and geographical overlays of justice-involved youth residences with prevention service locations. It also included decision point analysis by race/ethnicity. Key Multnomah County analysis points:

- Overall Crime and recidivism continue to trend downward
- Of youth screened by the juvenile justice system:
 - 1 in 4 youth had a school failure or disconnection problem
 - 5 in 8 youth had problematic peer relationships
 - 2 in 5 youth had substance use beyond experimental stage
- Of youth who start the 9th grade
 - 58% of all youth graduate
 - 51% of African American youth graduate
 - 40% of Latino youth graduate
- Comparing population percentages with racial/ethnic breakouts at key decision points, African American youth are overrepresented at the police referral, adjudication and commitment to Youth Correctional Facility (YCF) decision points. Latino youth are overrepresented at the YCF commitment decision point.

Multnomah County Juvenile Crime Prevention Strategic Plan

2009-2011 Biennium – Executive Summary

- Prevention services are not concentrated in areas where youth who are charged with crimes are living. The David Douglas area especially stands out in this regard.

Strategic Themes

Four main strategic themes emerged in the planning process:

- Connection to Community. Participants voiced a strong desire to replace one-sided institutional responses with collaborative prevention and intervention approaches. Community members and organizations are committed to crime prevention and express a will to work with systems to get better results.
- Empowering Families. Parents want to know how to navigate complex systems and successfully advocate for their children. They call for meaningful ways to express concerns about systems and contribute to system improvement.
- Commitment to Ending Racial and Ethnic Disparities. Overall community safety continues to improve in the County. Crime and recidivism continue to decline. But for more than the last decade African-American and Latino youth have continued to experience disproportionate school failure/fallout/pushout, police contact, detention, commitment to youth correctional facilities, and transfers to adult criminal court. We have to do better. No single solution will correct the disparity, which is complicated, diffuse and often unacknowledged. Communities, families, schools and child-serving agencies voiced determination to share the responsibility for getting better outcomes for African American and Latino youth.
- Commitment to Cross-System Partnerships. Child welfare, juvenile justice, law enforcement, schools, treatment and community organizations express continued commitment to work together to fight crime, coordinate services, and improve systems.

Community Issues, Gaps, Barriers, Strategies & Activities

The planning process identified community issues and gaps & barriers within each issue area. It became clear that many of the gaps and barriers identified were related to ineffective collaboration with families and community, and between youth-serving organizations. Others were the result of shrinking resources. Some were rooted in policy.

Participants proposed strategies and activities to address the gaps and barriers. Many current activities will continue in the next biennium rounding out a comprehensive set of crime prevention strategies. These include continuing the allocation of JCP Prevention funds to outpatient substance abuse & mental health treatment, and cognitive behavioral skill development courses within the Department of Community Justice.

Following is a list of community issues with proposed strategies and activities prioritized in the planning process:

Moving Forward

Through the process of creating this plan parents, youth, schools, treatment professionals, mentors and youth advocates have asked clearly for change. They want to be involved in shaping Juvenile Crime Prevention services and strategies in the county. A number of community members very bravely asked the system to do better, and they offered their help to make it better. People inside the system have an obligation to listen to the voices of the people they serve and find meaningful ways to work together to get better results. Putting this plan into action provides opportunities to do that.

The strategies and activities included in this plan are ambitious. The next step is to create a work plan with a process for monitoring progress, including clear milestones for implementation and outcome measures for understanding how effective the strategies are.
